FORBIDDEN LOVE.

at BARRE CONSTRUCTION OF THE STATE OF THE ST

Look, love, upon me, with thine eyes!

Yet, no-men's evil tongues are night

Look miy, then, and with thy aight heed him not; and he, enraged, orders his mercenary troops to begin the attack—to how them down. On they rush; but our little hand firmly maintains its ground, and is ready to receive them. Now they join in deadly condict. Heaven protect the right:—Much blood is split, and many a death-blow is dealt. But see, they yield!

Oh, heaven! our party yields. Overpowered by numbers they fall back, step by step contending.
And now they have reached the bridge. The object for which they have contended is in view.
Here they stop. See! they turn upon their pursuers, and tell them they shall go no further: and see, too, there come their brethren to assist them. Now again they join in conflict: and look! the hostile army turns and flees. Our countrymen pursue, and drive them back to whence they came. One long, loud shout—the victory is ours!

The wet prairies and swampy lands, are however subject to fever and ague, and bilous complaints, but that the settlers in general have found the state, taken as a whole, favorable to health, the astonishing increase of the population bears ample testimony. The winters are mild compared with New England, or even Pennsylvania. Winter commences about Christmas, and lasts seldom more than six weeks—in the northern parts, snow sometimes, though rarely, falls a foot and ahalf in depth. Peach trees are generally in blossom in March, and the forests begin to be green from the 5th to the 15th of April. Vast numbers of flowering shrube are in full flower before
